Graduate School and a Sub-Freshman Class. It now consists of a School of Literature, School of Sciences, School of Law and a School of Finance and Economics. The School of Finance and Economics includes a Department of Finance, Department of Accounting and Department of Business. The previous School of Agriculture of Chungshan University has been merged with the School of Agriculture of Lingnan University and the School of Agriculture of Kwangsi University to form the South China College of Agriculture. The previous School of Engineering of Chungshan University has been merged with the Kwangtung University to form the South China College of Engineering. Both of these colleges are located on the campus of Chungshan University at Shihp'ai (N 23-03, E 113-20).

3. The School of Medicine of Chungshan University has been merged with the private Kuang Hua (0342/5478) Medical College and the School of Medicine of Lingnan University to form the South China College of Medicine, which is administered from the campus of old Chungshan University at Paitzu (4102/1311/6424), Tungshan (2639/1472). Gynecology and pediatrics are centered in that part of the South China College of Medicine which was formerly known as the School of Medicine of Chungshan University; medicine and surgery are centered in what was formerly known as Kuang Hua Medical College.
4. The Graduate School and the Sub-Freshman Class of Chungshan University have been abolished in the amalgamation.
5. The salary of a professor at Chungshan University is approximately JMP 1,200,000; an assistant professor JMP 1,000,000; a lecturer JMP 800,000; and a teaching assistant JMP 400,000. In addition every professor is provided with a house. The children of all teachers are given free tuition. Professors are required to form learning groups which convene each day for discussion before the beginning of classes. Professors who speak carelessly in classrooms are liable to criticism by professional students until the carelessness is admitted.
6. Students are provided with free room and board. Food has generally been insufficient; however, students from well-to-do families are permitted to order additional food. Students from the families of public functionaries often suffer from malnutrition.
7. The students' daily routine is as follows:

0630-	rising
0700-0730	breakfast consisting of congee only
0730-0800	physical exercise
0800-1200	classes
1200-1330	lunch and rest
1330-1730	classes
1730-2000	leisure and dinner
2000-2200	evening classes

Students usually retire at 2230. Every Tuesday and Friday evening students are obliged to attend "small group" meetings.

8. The Russian system of grading has been adopted. Under this system 5 is a perfect score and 3 is a passing grade.
